

I have been notified that the FCC is considering a proposal to preempt state Telephone Privacy laws in favor of a national standard. As a taxpayer, I don't see why this is necessary. I have been very happy the way the state of Indiana has been handling the privacy law and I can't tell you how enjoyable it has been not to have my phone ringing at all times of the day, including evenings and weekends. The number of hang up calls has gone from 10 a week to none. I don't see any reason for the FCC to get involved and lessen the state of Indiana's privacy law protections and would strongly advise the FCC to reconsider this proposal.

Sincerely,
Linda Eilmann
